Small plots producing 300 to 700 kg of cherry each year are planted with traditional coffee varieties of Dega and Wulicho with native shade trees of Birbira, Grevillea and Kobo. Many of these plots are intercropped with cereals, beans and banana plants. It is very traditional, centuries old, low input farming with insignificant to no agrochemical and fertilizer. Only the fully developed red cherry is collected and delivered to collection stations, where it is sun dried on African beds.
